The Woodlands High School has also been highly ranked by ESPN RISE FAB 50 the past few years including the #1 ranking for all sports for the year of 2009.

Reed's pedigree in basketball is rich in tradition, as his career has granted him the opportunity to play for and work with some of the great basketball minds in recent history, including three coaches who have all won collegiate National Coach of the Year honors.

As a highly touted guard at Little Snake River Valley High School in his hometown of Baggs, Wyoming, Reed shattered numerous school records en route to leading his team to two state championships while playing for his now deceased father, Ed Reed, a member of the High School Coaches Hall of Fame. A prolific scorer and consummate team player, Reed was recruited by many of the top collegiate programs of that time, and agreed to attend the University of Iowa to play for Dr. Tom Davis.

After a successful stint at Iowa, Reed transferred to Washington State University for the opportunity to play for then head coach, and current University of Houston Head Coach Kelvin Sampson. A team captain his last two seasons at WSU, Reed's leadership and floor presence was instrumental in leading the Cougars to a 20 win season and a berth to its first NCAA Tournament in 11 years during his senior year.

Reed's first coaching stop took him to Blinn College in Brenham, Texas, where he served as an assistant coach for three seasons. Working under the helm of now deceased Joe Curl, Reed accompanied Curl to the University of Houston to help resurrect a dormant women's basketball program. Reed assisted in all areas of the basketball program while at Houston, and was integral in laying the foundation for a program that has made its mark on the national landscape of Division I women's basketball over the last several years.

After making a brief career change that took him out of coaching, Reed's passion and love for basketball drove him back into the coaching ranks. As an assistant coach for the varsity boys' basketball team at Westfield High School (Houston, Texas), Reed's basketball knowledge and experience helped guide his squad to the playoffs each of his two seasons there.

Reed's success at Westfield led him to take over the helm at New Caney High School (New Caney, Texas). While at New Caney, Reed took a struggling program that had tallied only five wins the season prior to his arrival, and led them to double-figure wins.

Reed received a Bachelor of Arts Degree in Business Management and a Master's of Education (Athletic Administration) Degree at Washington State University.

Reed has two children, Rachel (20 and current student at the University of Southern California) and Bruce (12 and a 5th grader). During his free time, Reed enjoys spending time with his children & friends. He is an avid sports fan, as he enjoys attending Highlander football games and cheering on the Houston Astros, Rockets and Texans. Coach Reed resides in The Woodlands.
